

Moving ahead A challenging career

Network Rail offers an exciting place to work, which really makes a difference to people's daily lives.

Jo Kaye has been with Network Rail since the beginning, having started her career with Railtrack as a graduate trainee in 1995. Her first 'real' job with the Company was as a signalling manager before progressing through various posts within Operations and Customer Services, to Head of West Coast in 2007 and to her current role as route director of London North Western, in 2009.

The London North Western route follows the West Coast main line from Euston to the Scottish borders, taking in major commuter routes, inter-city and local services between London, Watford Junction, Milton Keynes, Birmingham, Manchester, Preston and Liverpool.

Jo enjoys the variety of her role most but acknowledges that the rate of change at Network Rail is always a challenge:

It's never the same day twice!

Jo's next big challenge is to get the West Coast performance stable and improving constantly. She believes that Network Rail offers a chance to be part of something with purpose:

It's an exciting place to work, which really makes a difference to people's daily lives.

Personal commitment to what we do, coupled with the drive to deliver and the ability to pull together activities from across the business to get a better result are what Jo considers to be the qualities that drive results at Network Rail. But ultimately, it's the people that makes Network Rail different:

Nearly everyone I meet is really committed to making a difference, and very few treat it as just a 'job'.

Learn more about what Network Rail can offer you at www.networkrail.co.uk/careers

It's the people that make Network Rail different – everyone is committed to making a difference.

